Inside the Book

Native American Indian Homes is divided into four chapters, each of which focuses on a different type of home.

- Chapter 1: Tipis

Tipis were the homes of the nomadic tribes of the Great Plains. They were made of animal skins and were easy to transport. Tipis were also well-suited to the harsh climate of the Great Plains, providing shelter from the sun, rain, and wind.

- Chapter 2: Longhouses

Longhouses were the homes of the Iroquois and other tribes of the Northeast. They were made of wood and bark and were often very large. Longhouses could accommodate up to 100 people and were used for both living and ceremonial purposes.

- Chapter 3: Pueblos

Pueblos were the homes of the Pueblo tribes of the Southwest. They were made of adobe and were often built in multi-story structures. Pueblos were well-suited to the dry climate of the Southwest and provided protection from the sun and wind.

- Chapter 4: Cliff Dwellings

Cliff dwellings were the homes of the Anasazi people of the Southwest. They were built in the cliffs of canyons and were often very difficult to access. Cliff dwellings provided protection from the elements and from enemies.
