Ann Petry's The Street is a powerful and moving novel that tells the story of Lutie Johnson, a young black woman struggling to survive in Harlem. First published in 1946, The Street was a groundbreaking work of literature that helped to change the way that white Americans viewed black people. Petry's novel is a searing indictment of racism and poverty, and it remains as relevant today as it was when it was first published.

Lutie Johnson is a single mother who is trying to raise her son Bub in a dilapidated apartment on 116th Street in Harlem. Lutie works long hours as a domestic worker, but she is barely able to make ends meet. She is constantly harassed by her landlord, Mr. Johnson, who is determined to evict her from her apartment. Lutie is also struggling to cope with the death of her husband, who was killed in a police shooting. She is haunted by nightmares about his death, and she is afraid that she will never be able to move on with her life.

Despite the challenges that she faces, Lutie is a strong and determined woman. She is fiercely protective of her son, and she is determined to give him a better life than she had. Lutie's story is both heartbreaking and inspiring. It is a story of resilience and hope, and it is a reminder that even in the darkest of times, there is always light at the end of the tunnel.
